

Political Science: Federalism

Federalism divides power between national and state governments. The US Constitution separates powers into legislative, executive, and judicial branches. Checks and balances prevent any branch from dominating. Marbury v. Madison established judicial review. McCulloch v. Maryland affirmed federal supremacy. The Bill of Rights protects individual liberties. Electoral College elects the President through state-based electors.